"It is my sad duty to announce the passing, early this morning, of our brother, Mr. Justice Pierce Butler. After a long and distinguished career at the Minnesota Bar, he was appointed Associate Justice of this Court and took his seat in January, 1923. Trained in the exacting school of a most active professional practice, Pierce Butler brought to this Court not only his learning in the law but a rich store of practical experience. His fidelity, his courage and forthrightness, which were his outstanding characteristics, made him a doughty warrior for his convictions, and he served the Court with great ability, an indefatigable industry, and an unwavering loyalty to its traditions and to his lofty conception of its function in preserving our constitutional heritage.

"The funeral services in Washington will be held tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock at Saint Matthew's Cathedral, and the Court will attend. A committee of the Court composed of Mr. Justice McReynolds, Mr. Justice Stone and Mr. Justice Roberts, will attend the services to be held in St. Paul.

"As a further token of respect for the memory of our brother, the Court, immediately upon the conclusion of the hearing in the case now on argument, in which counsel from the Pacific Coast are engaged, will adjourn until Wednesday, November 22nd, next, at noon."

Mr. Attorney General Jackson addressed the Court as follows:

- - - - - - - - - - -

"Mr. Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States:

The Bar of the Supreme Court, including those who here represent the executive branch of the government, desires to observe with you the one hundred fiftieth anniversary of this Court's service. We do so in a spirit of rededication to the great principles of freedom and order which come to life in your judgments.

The Court as we know it could hardly have been foreseen from its beginnings. When it first convened, no one seemed in immediate need of its appellate process, and it adjourned -- to await the perpetration of errors by lower courts. Errors were, of course, soon forthcoming. The Justices who sat upon the Bench, although not themselves aged, were older than the Court itself. The duration of an argument was then measured in days instead of hours. All questions were open ones, and neither the statesmanship of the Justices nor the imagination of the advocate was confined by the ruling case. Some philosophers have so feared the weight of tradition as to assert that happy are a people who have no history. We, however, may at least believe that there was some happiness in belonging to a bar that had little occasion to distinquish precedents or in sitting upon a Court that could not be invited to overrule itself. Few tribunals have had greater opportunity for original and constructive work, and none ever seized opportunity with more daring and wisdom.

From the very beginning the duties of the Court required it, by interpretation of the Constitution, to settle doubts which the framers themselves had been unable to solve. Luther Martin in his great plea in McCulloch v. Maryland was not only an advocate but a witness of what had been and a prophet of things to come. He said: "The whole of this subject of taxation is full of difficulties, which the Convention found it impossible to solve, in a manner entirely satisfactory." Thus, controversies so delicate that the framers would have risked their unity if an answer had been forced were bequeathed to this Court. During its early days it had the aid of counsel who expounded the Constitution from intimate and personal experience in its making. They knew that to get acceptance of its fundamental design for government many controversial details were left to be filled in from time to time by the wisdom of those who were to follow. This knowledge made them bold.

The passing of John Marshall marked the passing of that phase of the Court's experience. Thereafter the Constitution became less a living and contemporary thing -- more and more a tradition. The work of the Court became less an exposition of its text and setting and purposes and became more largely a study of what later men had said about it. The Constitution was less resorted to for deciding cases, and cases were more resorted to for deciding about the Constitution. This was the inevitable consequence of accumulating a body of judicial experience and opinion which the legal profession would regard as precedents.

It would, I am persuaded, be a mistake to regard the work of the Court of our own time as either less important or less constructive than that of its earlier days. It is perhaps more difficult to revise an old doctrine to fit changed conditions than to write a new doctrine on a clean slate. But, as the underlying structure of society shifts, its law must be reviewed and rewritten in terms of current conditions if it is not to be a dead science.

In this sense, this age is one of founding fathers to those who follow. Of course, they will re-examine the work of this day, and some will be rejected. Time will no doubt disclose that sometimes when our generation thinks it is correcting a mistake of the past, it is really only substituting one of its own. But the greater number of your judgments become a part of the basic philosophy on which a future society will adjust its conflicts.

We who strive at your bar venture to think ourselves also in some measure consecrated to the task of administering justice. Recent opinions have reminded us that the initiative in reconsidering legal doctrine should come from an adequate challenge by counsel. Lawyers are close to the concrete consequences upon daily life of the pronouncements of this Court. It is for us to bring the cases and to present for your corrective action any wrongs and injustices that result from operation of the law.

However well the Court and its bar may discharge their tasks, the destiny of this Court is inseparably linked to the fate of our democratic system of representative government. Judicial functions, as we have evolved them, can be discharged only in that kind of society which is willing to submit its conflicts to adjudication and to subordinate power to reason. The future of the Court may depend more upon the competence of the executive and legislative branches of government to solve their problems adequately and in time than upon the merit which is its own. There seems no likelihood that the tensions and conflicts of our society are to decrease. Time increases the disparity between underlying economic and social conditions, in response to which our Federation was fashioned, and those in which it must function. Adjustment grows more urgent, more extensive, and more delicate. I see no reason to doubt that the problems of the next half century will test the wisdom and courage of this Court as severely as any half century of its existence.

In a system which makes legal questions of many matters that other nations treat as policy questions, the bench and the bar share an inescapable responsibility for fostering social and cultural attitudes which sustain a free and just government. Our jurisprudence is distinctive in that every great movement in American history has produced a leading case in this Court. Ultimately, in some form of litigation, each underlying opposition and unrest in our society finds its way to this judgment seat. Here, conflicts were reconciled or, sometimes, unhappily, intensified. In this forum will be heard the unending contentions between liberty and authority, between progress and stability, between property rights and personal rights, and between those forces defined by James Bryce as centrifugal and centripetal, and whose struggle he declared made up most of history. The judgments and opinions of this Court deeply penetrate the intellectual life of the nation. This Court is more than an arbiter of cases and controversies. It is the custodian of a culture and is the protector of a philosophy of equal rights, of civil liberty, of tolerance, and of trusteeship of political and economic power, general acceptance of which gives us a basic national unity. Without it our representative system would be impossible.

Lord Balfour made an observation about British government, equally applicable to American, and expressed a hope that we may well share, when he wrote:

> 'Our alternating Cabinets, though belonging to different parties, have never differed about the foundation of society, and it is evident that our whole political machinery presupposes a people so fundamentally at one that they can afford to bicker; and so sure of their own moderation that they are not dangerously disturbed by the never ending din of political conflict. May it always be so.'"

- - - - - - - - - - -

Mr. Charles A. Beardsley, President of the American Bar Association, addressed the Court as follows:

- - - - - - - - - - -

"Mr. Chief Justice and the Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States:

I appreciate this opportunity, which has been accorded to me as the representative of the American Bar Association, to participate in this commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the first session of this honorable Court.

It is most fitting that this event should be commemorated. Its commemoration may well serve to recall to the minds of the American people the purposes of the founders of our National Government, and the part, in the fulfillment of those purposes, that this Court was intended to take, has taken, and will take in the years to come. And this commemoration may well serve, further, to challenge the American people to dedicate themselves anew to the fulfillment of those purposes.

In the Preamble of our Constitution, its framers recited the purposes to attain which the Constitution was to be ordained and established. In this recital, the purpose to "establish justice" is second only to the purpose "to form a more perfect union."

Daniel Webster reminds us that justice is "the ligament that holds civilized beings together," and "the greatest interest of man on earth."

To the end that they might "establish justice," to the end that they might provide "the ligament that holds civilized beings together," to the end that they might strengthen the foundation of civilization on the North American Continent, and to the end that they might serve "the greatest interest of man on earth," the framers of the Constitution provided therein for a federal judiciary, with this Court as its head, to administer "justice" under and pursuant to law.

In the words of President Washington this Court was intended to be "the keystone of our political fabric." And it was intended to be the protector of our Constitution and of the inalienable rights of a free people.

Gladstone's characterization of our Constitution, as "the most wonderful product ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man," is justified by the fact that, for 150 years, this Court has approached as near as any human institution might well be expected to approach the fulfillment of the purpose of the framers of the Constitution, to "establish justice" for the American people.

We may properly take pride in the extent to which this Court has approached that fulfillment, realizing as we do, as Addison reminds us, that to be just "to the utmost of our abilities, is the glory of man," and that "to be perfectly just, is an attribute of the divine nature."

Not only is it permissible on this occasion for us to recall that this Court is a human institution, but it is also desirable for the American people to recall, on this occasion, that this human institution will endure, and that justice, under and pursuant to law, will be preserved for the American people, only so long as the American people, by their alertness, fidelity and sanity, cause them to be preserved and to endure.

For there are forces at work, in the world today, that are inimical to the continued fulfillment by this Court of the purpose for which it was created.

As a result of the workings of these forces, in substantial parts of the world, national temples of justice are no longer honored or worthy of honor, and international morality and law are giving ground to international immorality and anarchy. And many hundreds of millions of people are engaged in war, seeking to settle their differences, not according to justice, but by force - by the use of a means that is calculated to bring victory to the strongest, or to the most unscrupulous, of the contending peoples, wholly regardless of justice.

And, even within our own borders, there are forces at work that are inimical to the principles upon which our Government is founded, including the principle of justice under and pursuant to law.

Thus, there is a tendency, among groups of employers and employees, to use physical force as the means of settling differences, instead of being willing to use the administration of justice - the institution devised by man, when he was emerging from barbarism, as a substitute for combats, for fights and for wars - an institution that is calculated to bring victory to the contending party who has the most justice on his side, regardless of the relative physical strength of the contending parties.

Also, we have among us many people who are eternally striving to inculcate doctrines that, in other parts of the world, are producing international lawlessness, anarchy and war, doctrines that, in other parts of the world, are destroying temples of justice, and doctrines that, in other parts of the world, are depriving the people of their liberties, and of their lives.

And finally, there is an all-too-widespread inclination to disregard the fundamental principles, upon which our Government, and our Civilization, are founded, and an all-too-general disposition to ignore the historic warning that "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty."

For 150 years, the American people have honored, respected and sustained this Court, and, through the years this Court has gained for itself the gratitude and affectionate regard of the American people, because the American people have been steadfast in their devotion to the fundamental principles upon which our Government is founded, and because the American people have seen in the record of this Court the evidence of the striving by its members to be just, "to the utmost of" their "abilities."

This Court has gained, and has retained, this honor, this respect, this gratitude, and this affectionate regard, although, in the words of a nineteenth century publicist, this Court has no "palaces or treasures, no arms but truth and wisdom, and no splendor but the justice and publicity of its judgments."

On this occasion, as we commemorate the 150th anniversary of the first session of this Court, we dedicate ourselves anew, to the task of defending our Constitution, to the task of guarding our liberties, and to the task of strengthening, defending and preserving this Court, as "the keystone of our political fabric," as the protector of our Constitution, and as the guarantor of justice for the American people under and pursuant to law, not only for another 150 years, but also for all time."

The Chief Justice said:

"Mr. Attorney General and Mr. Beardsley:

The Court welcomes the words of appreciate you have spoken in recognition of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the day appointed for the first session of this tribunal. We are highly gratified at the presence of distinguished Senators and Representatives,—the members of the Judiciary Committees of the Houses of Congress and of the Special Joint Committee appointed in relation to this occasion. We trust that what has been said echoes a sentiment cherished in the hearts of the American people. They have again and again evinced the sound instinct which leads them, regardless of any special knowledge of legal matters, to cherish as their priceless possession the judicial institutions which safeguard the reign of law as opposed to despotic will. Democracy is a most hopeful way of life, but its promise of liberty and of human betterment will be but idle words save as the ideals of justice, not only between man and man, but between government and citizen, are held supreme.

The States have the power and privilege of administering justice except in the field delegated to the Nation, and in that field there is a distinct and compelling need. The recognition of this anniversary implies the persistence, through the vicissitudes of one hundred and fifty years, of the deep and abiding conviction that amid the clashes of political policies, the martial demands of crusaders, the appeals of sincere but conflicting voices, the outbursts of passion and of the prejudices growing out of particular interests, there must be somewhere the quiet, deliberate and effective determination of an arbiter of the fundamental questions which inevitably grow out of our constitutional system and must be determined in controversies as to individual rights. It is the unique function of this Court, not to dictate policy, not to promote or oppose crusades, but to maintain the balance between States and Nation through the maintenance of the rights and duties of individuals.

But necessary as is this institution, its successful working has depended upon its integrity and the confidence thus inspired. By the method of selection, the tenure of office, the removal from the bias of political ambition, the people have sought to obtain as impartial a body as is humanly possible and to safeguard their basic interests from impairment by the partiality and the passions of politics. The ideals of the institution cannot, of course, obscure its human limitations. It does most of its work without special public attention to particular decisions. But ever and anon arise questions which excite an intense public interest, are divisive in character, dividing the opinion of lawyers as well as laymen. However serious the division of opinion, these cases must be decided. It should occasion no surprise that there should be acute differences of opinion on difficult questions of constitutional law when in every other field of human achievement, in art, theology, and even on the highest levels of scientific research, there are expert disputants. The more weighty the question, the more serious the debate, the more likely is the opportunity for honest and expert disagreement. This is a token of vitality. It is fortunate and not regrettable that the avenues of criticism are open to all whether they denounce or praise. This is a vital part of the democratic process. The essential thing is that the independence, the fearlessness, the impartial thought and conscientious motive of those who decide should both exist and be recognized. And at the end of 150 years, this tribunal still stands as an embodiment of the ideal of the independence of the judicial function in this, the highest and most important sphere of its exercise.

We cannot recognize fittingly this anniversary without recalling the services of the men who have preceded us and whose work has made possible such repute as this institution enjoys. This tribunal works in a highly concrete fashion. The traditions it holds have been wrought out through the years at the conference table and in the earnest study and discussions of men constantly alive to a supreme obligation. We do not write on a blank sheet. The Court has its jurisprudence, the helpful repository of the deliberate and expressed convictions of generations of sincere minds addressing themselves to exposition and decision, not with the freedom of casual critics or even of studious commentators, but under the pressure and within the limits of a definite official responsibility.

To one who over twenty-nine years ago first took his seat upon this Bench, this day is full of memories of associations with those no longer with us, who wrought with strength and high purpose according to the light that was given them, in complete absorption in their judicial duty. We pay our tribute to these men of the more recent period as we recognize our indebtedness to their eminent predecessors. We venerate their example. Reflection upon their lives brings emphasis to the thought that even with the tenure of the judicial office, the service of individuals however important in their day soon yields to the service of others who must meet new problems and carry on in their own strength.

The generations come and go but the institutions of our Government have survived. This institution survives as essential to the perpetuation of our constitutional form of government,— a system responsive to the needs of a people who seek to maintain the advantages of local government over local concerns and at the same time the necessary national authority over national concerns, and to make sure that the fundamental guarantees with respect to life, liberty and property, and of freedom of speech, press, assembly and religion shall be held inviolate. The fathers deemed that system of government well devised to secure the blessings of liberty to themselves and their posterity. Whether that system shall continue does not rest with this Court but with the people who have created that system. As Chief Justice Marshall said: "The people made the Constitution, and the people can unmake it. It is the creature of their will, and lives only by their will." It is our responsibility to see that their will as expressed in their Constitution shall be faithfully executed in the determination of their controversies.

And deeply conscious of that responsibility, in the spirit and with the loyalty of those who have preceded us, we now rededicate ourselves to our task."

Mr. Attorney General Jackson addressed the Court as follows:

- - - - - - - - - -

Mr. Chief Justice and Associate Justices:

The Bar of the Supreme Court has delegated me to lodge in your keeping its proceedings in memory of Mr. Justice Butler. By resolution it has expressed its high estimate of his life and services. The resolutions adopted by the Bar read as follows:

> At a meeting of the members of the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States held on January 27th, 1940, to take appropriate action following the death of Mr. Justice Butler, the Committee appointed by the Solicitor General reported this Minute for submission to the meeting:
> Pierce Butler's life story is an epic of America. From his birth on a small Minnesota farm to the day of his death while a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States his record was one of obstacles surmounted, of professional distinction achieved, and of merit appropriately rewarded.
> His father and mother, Irish immigrants from County Wicklow, had settled in Dakota County, Minnesota, where they lived the life of pioneer farmers. They reared a family of eight children, of whom the future jurist was one. He was born on St. Patrick's day (March 17th), 1866. Strong of body and of vigorous mind, he dominated his environment and used its limitations as opportunities for self-development. A country school-teacher at sixteen, he qualified for admission to Carleton College at Northfield, Minnesota, from which he was graduated in 1887. During his student days he did farm chores early and late, and in the daily interval rode a farm horse to school. Having determined to become a lawyer, he moved to Saint Paul and in 1888 was admitted to the bar.

His abilities were early recognized, and after serving for two years as an assistant he became the County Attorney of Ramsey County. In this way he acquired proficiency in the art of the successful trial lawyer and was noted for his capacity to win the confidence of all the diverse elements of which local juries were composed.

In 1897 he began the general practice of the law. Here again his character and ability made their mark and important clients were eager to retain him. While throughout his career he represented great railroads and other powerful corporations and became in this sense a corporation lawyer, he never sacrificed his independence of judgment and it was always he who dominated the client. His professional services were often placed at the disposal of the Government and he figured in many important cases arising under the Anti-Trust Laws and the Railroad and Utility Statutes. He was of the sort that men instinctively trust. He became one of the notable figures in the life of the great Northwest. When it was known that he was to appear the court room was wont to be crowded with people eager to hear him and to see him in action.

He had great energy, prodigious memory and large capacity for logical thinking. His character was a unit without internal stress. There was inherent a belief that there exists a philosophical rightness and he sought to apply it to each matter in hand. A skillful legal tactician, his sole strategy was to drive forward unswervingly in the direction which he regarded as the right one. Expediency never justified retreat or indirection.

As senior member of the firm of Butler, Mitchell and Doherty, he was constantly at work and always with notable fidelity to court and client. For the five years from 1913 to 1918 he served as a member of the Committee of Counsel for the Federal Valuation of Railroads. In 1919 he was of counsel for shareholders in proceedings in Canada under the Canadian Northern Acquisition Act. Later he was appointed one of the counsel for the Dominion of Canada in the Arbitration at Montreal held under the Grand Trunk System Acquisition Act. In this proceeding William H. Taft sat as one of the arbitrators. Although Mr. Taft dissented from the decision supporting the views urged by Mr. Butler, their association let to a warm friendship. The acquaintance with his powers and fairness gained in the course of that association doubtless was a factor in Chief Justice Taft's later recommendation of Mr. Butler for appointment to the Supreme Court when a vacancy was caused by the retirement of Mr. Justice Day. It was on November 23, 1922, while he was serving as counsel in the Toronto Railway Arbitration, that he, a Democrat, was nominated by President Harding to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The nomination not having been acted upon at that session of Congress, the President re-nominated him on December 5, 1922. He was confirmed by the Senate on December 21, 1922, and on the 2nd of January, 1923, the judicial oath was administered and he took his seat upon the bench.

During his seventeen years of service on the Court he saw his country pass through an era of unstable prosperity and into a period of resulting depression. Under such circumstances it was not surprising that many should lose faith in the soundness of the American tradition; but with such a life story behind him, it was inevitable that the faith of Mr. Justice Butler should never waver. He had, indeed, that capacity for deep emotion which was his by inheritance, but his experience had taught him to think realistically.

Fearful of the rule of men in place of the rule of law, he appealed to the accumulated body of the law as a continuous social expression and not as what might appear at a particular time to be enlightened social self-interest. He did not believe that the law is merely what the judges may from time to time say it is. He believed that there is a law that is greater than the judges and he was zealous to avoid its misapplication merely because the end in view appeared at the moment to be desirable.

He had faith in the power of objective reasoning and in the intellectual integrity of man, with correlative responsibility of the individual to develop himself and pursue the course that to him seemed right. This faith in the individual man was expressed by resistance to any attempted infringement of the bill of rights, and, in the absence of constitutional amendment, to centralization of government and to extension of its powers over the individual. He felt that greater material welfare under a paternal government — if possible of achievement — rather than ennobling the citizen would debase him by destroying his integrity and denying his will to exercise his moral and intellectual forces. He refused to concede that the individual is a helpless creature of an environment built by others, and opposed the kind of humanitarianism that would relegate him to that position.

It would be out of place in this Minute to attempt an analysis of his judicial opinions. That will follow in due course. Suffice it to say here that during all the years of his service he contributed to the Court not merely sound learning and ripe experience but calm judgment and the stabilizing influence of tested character.

While Mr. Justice Butler was a man of deep conviction, he could differ from other men without losing their good will. He was far from being a bitter partisan. Rather he was a man of generous sympathy and broad comprehension. His friends included old and young alike. Institutions of learning conferred honorary degrees upon him. The law students of Georgetown University named a law club in his honor. An American in the best sense of the word, he retained throughout his life an affectionate regard for the land of his ancestors. A visit to Ireland in 1934 was esteemed by him to be one of the happiest episodes in life. He was a lover of outdoor life and on his farm in Maryland sought refreshment of spirit — whenever the rigorous round of judicial duties permitted.

The land and people of Minnesota remained close to him, and he carried with him great and irreplaceable knowledge of the history of the Northwest, gathered from his own youthful experiences, from delighted reading of earlier days, and from wide personal knowledge of most of its later leaders and characters. The mention of a name would start a flow of reminiscence and anecdote reaching back into the development of that country, all full of the color of its personalities.

The domestic life of such a man was certain to approximate the ideal. Happily married and deeply devoted to wife and children, his was a Christian household characterized by plain living and high thinking. He was a devoted member of the Roman Catholic Church. The reality of his religion brought him comfort at times of domestic affliction. The high pressure of judicial work and disease common to advanced years overcame the powerful physique which was his by inheritance and conservation. After a brief illness he died in Washington on November 16, 1939. At his funeral in St. Matthew's Cathedral all sorts and conditions of men attended in silent tribute to his memory. Today representative members of the Bar of the Supreme Court of the United States are in their turn witnessing to their admiration and affectionate regard for one whose simple godliness and faithful public service endeared him to all who came within the circle of his influence.

Resolved, that the foregoing Minute be adopted; that a copy of it be transmitted to the Attorney General of the United States for presentation to the Court and that the Chairman of this meeting be directed to forward a copy of it to the family of Mr. Justice Butler.

Men eminent in the legal profession, former associates in the practice of the law, and public leaders have paid him eloquent and affectionate tribute. All of these tributes I offer for your records.

I should not presume to add words of my own, except that the proceedings are lacking in one viewpoint which I should be qualified to supply.

I knew Pierce Butler only as a Justice of this Court. He had reached the full maturity of his great intellectual powers. He was too earnest and forthright to wish me even on such an occasion to deny or minimize the conflict which your reports witness between the general philosophy I have advocated here and much of that to which he was so consistently devoted. But across that gulf, which always exists between two men who regard each other as representing ominous trends, I felt the strength, the warmth, and the sincerity of a great character — one of the most firm and steady men I have known.

His character was shaped by a hard way of life that left lasting convictions and attitudes in men who experienced it. Existence in a pioneer country, where nature is often hard and hostile and the competition of the elements is relentless, presents the choice between courage and self-discipline — or extinction. It offers a simple and rugged society in which place is won and held only by will and work and worth. It develops intense love of liberty and hatred of restraint and a self-reliance that does not know how to dodge, and never fears to stand firmly and, if need be, alone. These were the primary characteristics of Mr. Justice Butler.

To them he added an accumulation of learning and experience and legal abilities which won for him the respect of all shades of opinion at the Bar. In many cases here I feared his interrogations more than the argument of my adversary. He knew his way among the intricate procedures of the law. He knew from long experience the arts of advocacy. He could sense the point in an argument where the most candid advocate is tempted to stop a little short of a complete revelation, and he knew where there was an urge to over-emphasis. His questions from the bench cut to the heart of our cases. He could use his ready wit, his humor, his sarcasm, or his learning with equal ease and skill. He was relentless in bringing the lawyer face to face with the issues as he saw them. I think I never knew a man who could more quickly orient a statement of facts with his own philosophy. When the facts were stated the argument was about over with him — he could relate the case to his conceptions of legal principles without aid of counsel.

Even if it were otherwise appropriate, I have neither the perspective nor the detachment necessary to appraise the place that his work as a Justice will take in the annals of this Court. Time only will write the verdict on its permanence and its significance. He has left a body of deliberate comment and seasoned judgment on the problems that have vexed this Court, as well as government and society, during his judicial life. The future will have no difficulty learning what he meant and what he stood for. A man of no subtlety or sham, he pronounced his judgments without finesse, indirection, or obscurity. He has recorded the measure of his disagreement with the currents, and his deep anxiety about the drifts of our time.

If only time can judge the verity of his work it is equally true that only contemporaries can appraise the verity of his character. While the future will find that his work will speak for itself, it will turn to the testimony of contemporaries to learn the elusive qualities of the man.

For those who shall ask "What of the man?" we may record that in the memory of those who sought to win him in argument he will stand out as an impressive and formidable figure even among associates in whom those qualities were by no means rare. His judicial attitude was not one of frosty neutrality, but one of intensity and certitude of conviction on basic philosophies of life and society and law and government. He had no merely negative standard of goodness; experience and conviction committed him to profound affirmations, and he exemplified them unceasingly and with power. Among the public men of my time, I have known no one of more affirmative and immovable and masterful character than Mr. Justice Butler.

The Chief Justice said:

- - - - - - - - - - -

Mr. Attorney General:

The resolutions you have presented on behalf of the Bar fittingly epitomize the traits of character and outstanding achievements of an eminent advocate and judge — who would have considered this tribute by his professional brethren as the best possible reward for his long and arduous service.

The early environment of Pierce Butler suited his ambition and talent. It was not ill forture that in his childhood and youth he had to meet the rigorous demands of pioneer life in the northwest; that he had to win by self-denial and strenuous exertion the educational advantages which seem slender indeed as compared with the abundance of a later day. For he was in the midst of the opportunities of a fast developing community, where the very air quickened endeavor and the abilities and eager efforts of those endowed with physical and mental vigor received almost instant recognition. It was not ill fortune that he began the practice of the law in Saint Paul at a time when great enterprises were in the making, when legal talent held the key to a career of distinction and the standards of Bench and Bar were as high as in the older eastern States.

The opportunities for practice had a most desirable variety, but, in accord with the traditions of the Bar, the highest prizes were to be won in the field of advocacy. Pierce Butler by temperament and aptitude was especially fitted for the contests of the forum. He had the fighting instinct, and his training developed rare skill in the use of the advocate's weapons. He soon had opportunity for public service as prosecuting attorney, and thus early secured wide recognition of his unusual talents. Favored by nature with a powerful physique, and with a distinguished mien aided by a deliberate and impressive manner of speech, he became a respected but dreaded antagonist. He was not content with showy and superficial successes with juries. He aimed at a thorough knowledge of the law and a complete mastery of facts, which especially commended him to the higher courts. He had a passion for exactness. He was not addicted to subtlety and he hated pretense. He recognized just authority. He was faithful to every trust. He was rigorous in his self-discipline and spared no effort to realize his ideal of the careful and exact adviser, the zealous but accurate advocate, the intrepid vindicator of what he conceived to be the legal rights of those whose causes he espoused.

It is not extraordinary that with the natural advantages of a noble bearing, with his indomitable will and courage both in attack and defense, with his unflagging industry and devotion to what he believed to be justice according to law, he rapidly rose to eminence, and his expert advice and assistance were sought in matters of the gravest importance of both private and public concern. There are not wanting those who disparage the training and experience of the successful advocate, ignoring the fact that among the varied activities of our democratic society there exists no harder school of discipline, no wider opportunity for the study of human relations or for the detection of faults and abuses, no more insistent demand for a sound practical judgment and for rectitude and fair dealing, than are found in the exacting daily work of the legal practitioner who tries to live up to the ethical standards of the best traditions of the Bar and thus to win the highest professional esteem which is denied to the trickster and shallow pretender however/otherwise apparently successful.

It was with these qualities, and with that reputation, that Pierce Butler came to this Court at the height of his powers. He had already shown at this bar his exceptional skill and thoroughness in the presentation of cases. In the Minnesota Rate Cases (230 U.S. 352), he presented one of the ablest, most comprehensive and most careful briefs ever submitted to this Court. On the bench, he at once demonstrated an extraordinary capacity for the sustained judicial labor which our work demands, and to the last he was faithful in every task, indefatigable, fearless, conscientious. At the conference table, he was ever ready to present and defend his views with keenness, always with earnestness, and not infrequently with the thrusts of wit and eloquence which brought vivid reminders of forensic battles. He was thoroughly prepared by close study of records and, endowed with an extraordinary memory, he justly took pride in his ability to marshal facts and precedents in the most impressive manner.

It was natural that with his success in winning his way to distinction in an expanding community, with his appreciation of liberty and law, he should have been eager to conserve both the essential authority of government and the freedom of enterprise. The former was necessary in order to insure the latter. His conservatism was rooted in profound religious convictions. It was always manifest that he had definite principles and he had no sympathy for those whose only principle was to be without principle. Cherishing the ideals of authority and certainty, he demanded adherence to precedent and deplored what he considered to be an undue flexibility in constitutional interpretation. As he put it, "Generally speaking, at least, our decisions of yesterday ought to be the law of today." He was a strong defender of the conception of property rights which he believed to be secure by the accepted construction of the due-process clause. He believed in that conception as an essential stimulus to effort and as holding a better promise of social progress than governmental plans involving restriction of individual initiative. He believed in the right to choose one's calling, to pursue it unfettered, so far as consistent with good order and the equal rights of others, and to maintain and hold the material rewards of honest endeavor. In short, he sought to keep open the traditional path to individual achievement which he himself had trod.

While solicitous for the public order and the authority of law, he was equally a stickler for the rights of those accused of crime to be protected against the abuses of authority. He was zealous for the maintenance of just government but vehemently opposed to any action under any guise which he deemed to be arbitrary and capricious. He expressed his thought in the words of one of his opinions, which was quoted in one of the addresses at the meeting of the Bar: "Abhorrence, however great, of persistent and menacing crime will not excuse transgression in the courts of the legal rights of the worst offenders." (United States v. Motlow, 10 F.(2d) 657, 662.) And in his dissent in the first wire-tapping case, he thus voiced his conception of the appropriate interpretation of the great clauses of the Constitution for the safeguarding of personal liberty: "This Court has always construed the Constitution in the light of the principles upon which it was founded. The direct operation or literal meaning of the words used do not measure the purpose or scope of its provisions. Under the principles established and applied by this Court, the Fourth Amendment safeguards against all evils that are like and equivalent to those embraced within the ordinary meaning of its words. That construction is consonant with sound reason and in full accord with the course of decisions since McCulloch v. Maryland." (Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 487, 488.)

And with these views which I have endeavored briefly to interpret, — as I think he would wish them expressed — he wrought to the end, — a man of deep-seated convictions, religious and political, with unfailing loyalty to basic principles as he conceived them, — a personality of rare force and determination, and yet with the kindliest disposition, the most generous sympathy, the warmest heart.

It is not for us to speak of the sorrows that afflicted him, of his fortitude in severe trials, of the depth of his affection for those united to him by the strongest human ties. In the midst of judicial responsibilities which he was fully sharing with us, we were keenly aware of the private burdens which pressed upon him and were so bravely borne.

We mourn the loss of a great co-laborer. As the scenes of particular controversies swiftly shift, there abides the treasured memory of strength, of trained talent industriously applied, of unswerving integrity and fidelity, — the virtues of the just judge, always an exemplar and an inspiration, — the virtues which make secure the foundations of the temple of justice.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM, 1940.

ORDER.

It is ordered that Rule V of the Rules of Practice and Procedure in Criminal Cases be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

V. Supersedeas. An appeal from a judgment of conviction stays the execution of the judgment, unless the defendant pending his appeal shall elect to enter upon the service of his sentence. The trial court or the circuit court of appeals may stay the execution of any sentence to pay a fine or fine and costs upon such terms as it may deem proper. It may require the defendant pending the appeal to pay to the clerk in escrow the whole or any part of such fine and costs, to submit to an examination as to his assets, or to give a supersedeas bond, and it may likewise make any appropriate order to restrain the defendant from dissipating his assets and thereby preventing the collection of such fine.

October 21, 1940.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

OCTOBER TERM, 1940.

ORDER.

2. Supersedeas bonds must be taken, with good and sufficient security, that the appellant shall prosecute his appeal to effect, and answer all damages and costs if he fail to make his plea good. Such indemnity, where the judgment or decree is for the recovery of money not otherwise secured, must be for the whole amount of the judgment or decree, including just damages for delay, and costs and interest on the appeal, unless, after notice and hearing and for good cause shown, the judge or justice allowing the appeal fixes a different amount or orders security other than the bond; but in all suits where the property in controversy necessarily follows the event of the suit, as in real actions, replevin, and suits on mortgages, or where the property is in the custody of the marshal under admiralty process, as in case of capture or seizure, or where the proceeds thereof, or a bond for the value thereof, is in the custody or control of the court, indemnity is only required in an amount sufficient to secure the sum recovered for the use and detention of the property, and the costs of the suit, and just damages for delay, and costs and interest on the appeal.

Railroad Commission of Texas,
et al.,

Petitioners,

681 O.T. 1939 vs.

Rowan & Nichols Oil Co.

IT IS ORDERED that the following sentence on page 4 of the opinion handed down June 3, 1940, be stricken from the opinion:

> "Except where the jurisdiction rests, as it does not here, on diversity of citizenship, the only question open to a federal tribunal is whether the state action complained of has transgressed whatever restrictions the vague contours of the Due Process Clause may place upon the exercise of the state's regulatory power."

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the following paragraph be added at the close of the opinion:

> "While the presence of a federal question may also open up state issues, Siler v. Louisville & N. R. R., 213 U.S. 175, the claim here founded on Texas law is derived from a statute requiring proration on a "reasonable basis." Vernon's Texas Annotated Civil Statutes (1925) art. 6049c, §7. The Texas decisions, in so far as they have been brought to our attention, do not make clear whether the local courts may exercise an independent judgment on what is "reasonable." Compare Brown v. Humble Oil & Refining Co., 126 Tex. 296, 316. But, in any event, as we read the Texas cases, the standard of "reasonable basis" under the statute opens up the same range of inquiry as the respondent in effect asserted to exist in his claims under the Due Process Clause. These latter claims we have found untenable. What ought not to be done by the federal courts when the Due Process Clause is invoked ought not to be attempted by these courts under the guise of enforcing a state statute. Whether the respondent may still have a remedy in the state courts is for the Texas Courts to determine, and is not foreclosed by the denial, on the grounds we have indicated, of the extraordinary relief of an injunction in the federal courts."

Upon consideration of the motion of the States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan, New York, and Illinois, and in accordance with the following stipulation:

"Whereas, the State of Illinois contends that also during the period intervening between the effective date of the decree and since then substantial amounts of flocculent active sludge and sewage sludge have accumulated in the Brandon Road Pool and that the existence of such accumulation also adds to the menace of the health of the persons living adjacent thereto (which contention is denied by the resopndent Great Lakes States) and,

Lemann, before the close of the hearings, suggested that the Attorney General of the State of Illinois and the Attorneys General of the States of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan and New York (hereinafter referred to as the opposing Great Lakes States) consider the making of an agreement to permit a temporary increase in diversion from 1500 cubic second feet plus domestic pumpage now authorized by the decree of the United States Supreme Court of April 21, 1930, to 10,000 cubic second feet plus domestic pumpage of water from Lake Michigan through the Chicago

ON CONSIDERATION of the petition for a writ of certiorari herein to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, and of the argument of counsel thereupon had,

IT IS NOW HERE ORDERED by this Court that the said petition be, and the same is hereby, denied.

Per Mr. Chief Justice Hughes.

Mr. Justice Douglas took no part in the consideration and decision of this application.

Sanitary Canal for one continuous period of ten days so as to scour out the Brandon Road Pool at Joliet, Illinois, and attempt to remove whatever flocculent active sludge and sewage sludge may have accumulated in said pool, and

Whereas, the Special Master suggested that any such agreement between the State of Illinois and the opposing Great Lakes States would be without prejudice to any of the parties to the above captioned causes, and would be solely for the purpose of trying by this means to remove whatever flocculent active sludge deposits and sewage sludge may have accumulated in the Brandon Road Pool by reason of the introduction of untreated sewage and sludge from treated sewage. Nothing in this stipulation shall be construed as an admission by the opposing Great Lakes States as in any manner or form whatsoever waiving, abandoning or prejudicing any of the positions of the opposing Great Lakes States hereinbefore stated or at any time taken in these causes or in the course of the present hearings; and said opposing Great Lakes States hereby affirm and again advance each and every contention and allegation set forth in the return of Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan and New York as respondents to rule to show cause issued on application of the State of Illinois, as Petitioner, for a temporary modification of Paragraph 3 of the Decree of April 21, 1930, filed in this court on February 26, 1940; and said opposing Great Lakes States again deny each and every allegation contained in the Petition of the State of Illinois herein, filed in this court on January 15, 1940, and deny the positions taken during the course of the present hearings by Illinois, and,

Whereas, it is further understood that the State of Illinois does not by reason of this stipulation or motion or test in any manner or form waive, abandon or prejudice any of its positions at any time stated or taken in this proceeding, and the State of Illinois hereby affirms and again advances each and every contention and allegation set forth in its petition, and it is not to be construed as an admission by the State of Illinois that such temporary increase in diversion of water for a period of ten days will either remedy or ameliorate effectively the conditions in Brandon Pool which Illinois contends have constituted the alleged menace to health complained of, and,

Whereas, it is the position of the opposing Great Lakes States that any accumulation of sewage wastes and sludge in the Brandon Road Pool since the decree of the United States Supreme Court went into full operation on December 31, 1938, has not created any nuisance condition either from the standpoint of public health, navigation or in any other way, and that such temporary increase in diversion is in no wise necessary to protect the interests of public health or navigation, and,

Whereas, the opposing Great Lakes States are nevertheless, in a spirit of conciliation and accommodation, willing to enter into the agreement suggested by the Special Master upon the express condition—(a) that such agreement shall not be construed as in any way waiving, abandoning or prejudicing any of the positions of the opposing Great Lakes States hereinbefore stated or at any time taken in these causes or in the course of the present hearing; (b) that nothing in this stipulation nor the fact of the consent of the opposing Great Lakes States to such temporary expedient shall be construed as an admission or evidence of any claim of the State of Illinois or the Sanitary District of Chicago in the premises and shall not be used as a precedent for any future request for any additional temporary diversion over and above the amounts fixed by the decree of April 21, 1930.

Now, Therefore, it is Stipulated and Agreed by and between the parties to the above captioned causes, by their respective counsel, that a temporary increase in diversion from 1500 cubic second feet plus domestic pumpage now authorized by the United States Supreme Court decree of April 21, 1930, to 10,000 cubic second feet plus domestic pumpage of water from Lake Michigan through the Chicago Sanitary Canal may be authorized for one continuous period of ten days for the purpose of trying to remove whatever flocculent active sludge deposits and sewage sludge may have accumulated in the said Brandon Road Pool. It is understood that a record of said operation will be made and the results thereof incorporated in the record of the hearing.

It is Further Stipulated and Agreed that any such agreement will be without prejudice to any party to the above captioned causes and that such agreement is not to be used as a precedent for any future request for additional temporary diversion in excess of the amounts fixed by the United States Supreme Court Decree of April 21, 1930.

It is Further Stipulated and Agreed that a motion in accordance with this stipulation may be filed with the United States Supreme Court and that an order in accordance with the terms of this stipulation may thereupon be entered by said Court without notice to any of said parties.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,

Attorney General of the State of Illinois.

The Chief Justice said:

"On February 1, 1941, Mr. Justice James Clark McReynolds retired from active service as Associate Justice of this Court. Forthright, independent, maintaining with strength and tenacity of conviction, his conceptions of constitutional right, he has served with distinction upon this bench for upward of twenty-six years and has left a deep impress upon the jurisprudence of the Court. It is hoped that, relieved of the burden of active service, he will long enjoy his accustomed vigor of body and mind."
